

COMMUNIQUE

Communiqués are tools that are employed by the delegates in crisis hours. Communiqués are formal proposals to absent entities or outsend entities, inviting them to take action desired by one, or called by the situation.

For example: You are the delegate of Saxony, and require assistance from Russia for military deployments for any particular warfare. In achieving this, you may begin by writing a Communique to the delegate of Russia, seeking assistance, and in doing so, make your proposal extremely appealing.

- Communiques are simple communications with other foreign and regional officials, they aren't necessarily actions.
- They should also be detailed and can be used to formally ask another for assistance, request for collaboration and to set-up for future directives and especially joint directives/press releases.

CLOSED COMMUNIQUE 1.2

Date: July 5th, 1950

From: Defense Minister of Republic of Korea

To: Department of Defense of the USA

Subject: Call for Defense of Seoul and Korea As the conflict in Korea escalates and our forces face difficulty in defending our sovereignty, we urgently seek your esteemed support for our defense and operational capabilities.

1. Disruption of Supply Lines: We request the deployment of U.S. Air Force assets to conduct strategic air operations aimed at disrupting enemy supply lines. This action is vital to impair the logistical capabilities of the opposing forces and to relieve pressure on our defensive positions.

2. Deployment of Infantry and Armored Divisions: We urgently need additional support in the form of infantry and armored divisions. The reinforcement of these units will be crucial for our "Stand for Seoul" operation, ensuring we can defend the capital and critical infrastructure effectively. Please direct these divisions to be deployed through the ports of Busan or Gunsan, ensuring rapid and efficient transfer to the front lines.

3. Provision of Field Artillery: The provision of field artillery is required to enhance our defensive firepower. This will significantly strengthen our ability to hold key positions and repel enemy advances, especially in the defense of Seoul and breaking through enemy lines.

4. Reconnaissance Flights: We request the initiation of reconnaissance flights behind enemy lines to gather crucial intelligence on their positions and movements. This information is essential for strategic planning and operational effectiveness. Our commitment to defending our nation remains steadfast, and with your assistance, we are confident in our ability to turn the tide of the conflict. Thank you for your immediate consideration.

Sincerely,

Ministry of Defense Republic of Korea.
